Hello Fernanda, I'm writing to you about what happened at the cocoa plantation the other day.

Hello Emilio! Tell me about it.

Seen.

Well, three workers have already suffered heatstroke and fainted...

Again? That's just not right...
How are they?

Seen.

They're fine now. But they've had medical expenses, and of course, the foreman isn't going to cover them. Since they don't have insurance...

And the worst thing is that they've been told not to come back, that they can't work there anymore.

Can't we contact the company in Europe that buys the cocoa? Maybe they can do something.

I understand. Thank you for telling me. I'll make a note of the situation and call you back later.

I don't think the company cares much about these workers... but I know a fair trade activist in Brussels, Emma Vermaelen, who might know this company and whether they are willing to cooperate. Let me contact her!

Hello! I spoke to Emma, and she said she knows this company.

Apparently they're involved in a scandal with a new campaign. Knowing this, I don't think they're willing to care about your colleagues... Sorry.

I'll do my best with the resources of our own platform though.

Seen.

Oh dear. Well, let's see what we can do on our own...

Thank you very much for your help!
